

QUERCIA AL POGGIO

Chianti Classico | Tuscany

Nestled between the historic cities of Florence and Siena lies Quercia al Poggio, a historic estate in Barberino Val d'Elsa. Here, amidst rolling hills adorned with vineyards and olive trees, the Rossi family's property commands attention, flanked by the renowned estates of Isole e Olena and Monsanto

At Quercia al Poggio, they dance to nature's tune with precision organic farming, adding just a touch of oak for authenticity. Guided by a passionate vigneron, each bottle bursts with genuine character.

Quercia al poggio

UGA San Donato in Poggio, nestled within Chianti Classico, spans the borders of Barberino Tavarnelle and Poggibonsi. Surrounded by hills rising above 600 meters and swept by the mistral winds, its climate is influenced by its unique geography. This results in milder winters and cooler, ventilated summers, allowing for slower maturation and late harvests, producing wines of finesse and elegance with softer tannins and balanced acidity.

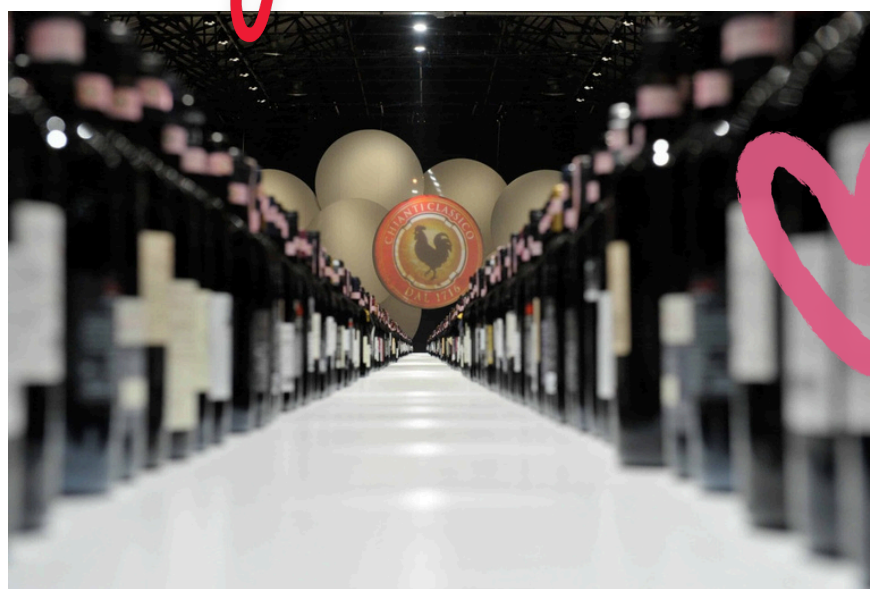

Just like their famous neighbors, Quercia al Poggio's soils are a blend of rich clay and limestone, sprinkled with pockets of galestro, a special Chianti Classico gem. The clay brings a delightful roundness, while the limestone and galestro add intricate detail, bringing their wines to vibrant life!

How Sweet is Sangiovese?

Chianti Classico holds immense untapped potential, rivaling any region worldwide. Despite Tuscany's renowned wines, Chianti stands out with Sangiovese leading the charge. Its diverse terroirs, rich soils, and embrace of organic farming promise wines of unparalleled quality. With natural forests, polycultural farms, and strict planting regulations, Chianti Classico is a treasure trove awaiting discovery.
